

Hi, everyone! I'm also going to do a survey of the threatened Emperor Penguin. Well, here I am at the scientific research station in Antarctica, the coldest, windiest, and driest continent in the world! As a marine biologist, I'm going to study the way marine wildlife adapts to extreme temperatures. Tomorrow, all the newcomers are going on a survival course for a week with ski-dooes and sledges. There are seals everywhere and yesterday I saw a humpback whale. Despite the freezing cold, the scenery and wildlife here are incredible. It's summer right now, so the weather is quite 'mild' – it's 32°F today! It'll be difficult, but at least I'm going to be very busy. Well, bye for now!
