

When reflecting on a recent important decision I had to make, I approached it by considering both facts and emotions. I began by gathering relevant information, assessing the pros and cons, and considering the potential outcomes of each option. However, there's always room for improvement, and in the future, I might focus on gathering even more detailed information or taking additional time to reflect on my emotional responses. I also took into account my feelings about the situation, as I believe that emotions can provide valuable insights into what is truly important to me. In making my decision, I aimed to balance logical reasoning with my emotional responses. In terms of satisfaction, I feel content with how I approached the decision-making process.