

Nursing is a very versatile field and the subjects I am currently studying have many links with adult nursing. Studying maths has developed my ability to stretch myself in terms of my numerical and problem solving skills and has improved my mental agility with numbers, fractions and general use of maths, which is ideally suited to nursing. Applied Biology is the most prominent subject in terms of links to nursing as all my units are situated around the anatomy of the human body. Ethical considerations are also a large part of psychology and are important values in the nursing profession. Mental health also forms part of my course and nurses must adapt to the ever growing mental disorders that are present in society.
