

Forests are an important and vital part of the ecosystem in which we live. The great importance of forests is that they are an important center and an essential home for the ecological diversity in which living organisms live. As a result of pollutants that cause their death, or because of human greed that replaces homes with green forests. It is an essential source for air purification, oxygen production and carbon dioxide removal. Therefore, man must conserve forests and plant more of them..