

Now begin the process of turning the requirements into functional models ● Models are logical; i.e., independent of how they are implemented (manual or computerized) ● Develop use-cases from the requirements ● Use-case: how a business system interacts with its environment ● Includes a diagram and a description to depict the discrete activities that the users perform ● Develop activity diagrams from the use-cases ● These model the business processes or how a business operates ● Used to illustrate the movement of objects (data) between activities