

Elephants are among the world's most amazing animals and Earth's largest land creatures. They feature a long trunk, big ears, and strong tusks made of ivory. Living in Africa and Asia, African elephants are bigger, while Asian elephants have smaller ears. As herbivores, elephants eat only plants, such as grass, leaves, fruits, and bark. They are very smart and emotional, capable of remembering places and recognizing people; a baby elephant is called a calf. Importantly, elephants are endangered due to hunting and habitat loss. Protecting them is vital to keep nature in balance.
