

An encoder and decoder are essential components in communication systems. For example, in digital communication, an encoder may convert analog signals into digital data. In summary, encoders and decoders work together to facilitate the effective transmission and retrieval of information, ensuring data integrity and compatibility across various systems.