

While flavonoids have been demonstrated to possess a range of biological characteristics, including antimicrobial, cytotoxic, anti-inflammatory, and antitumor effects, their capacity to act as strong antioxidants that protect the body from free radicals and reactive oxygen species is the most well-characterized feature of almost all flavonoid groups.