

The development of a common trade-related infrastructure, the deregulation of logistical services, and shared risk management strategies are further areas where regional cooperation may benefit international trade.