

It was a sunny day and I was in the neighborhood park, enjoying my time and reading a book. This serendipity was an unforgettable experience, as I found someone who shares many of the things I love and who also became my best friend. This story always reminds me that the world is really small and that we can find people who look like us and share the same interests as us. Suddenly, I saw someone reading the same book as me. I couldn't believe my eyes! We talked for hours on end about our favorite books, movies, music, and travels. I felt curious and happy at the same time.