

Kate Martin steals the Iowa women's basketball show against Caitlin Clark, Indiana Fever. It was an Iowa women's basketball party Saturday night in Las Vegas, and for once, Caitlin Clark didn't finish as the main attraction. She had Clark on her multiple times bringing the ball up the court and inbound. Bluder joined TV broadcasters Carolyn Peck and Krista Blunk during the first half, then Martin joined them postgame to dissect the special night some more. Gustafson had one rebound in eight minutes while attempting one trey. Now, obviously these two franchises are in very different spots, asking the respective former Hawkeyes on their roster to shoulder very different expectations. Clark continues to push through growing pains as a WNBA rookie on a rebuilding team. Martin and Gustafson have latched on with the two-time defending champs and play important roles off the bench. Clark drained a pair of deep 3-pointers for her only field goals of the night. It was Kate Martin who stole the show.
