

Cells usually do not grow on their own, they receive stimulus from the body to start growing according to an event or to continue a regular operation such as growing bones for the youth. Or by using small molecule inhibitors which inhibits the receptors function by stopping it from trans ducting the signal to the nucleus such as gefitinib which blocks the tyrosine kinase which an enzyme used for cellular communication and found in some receptors.