

Diana Taurasi Issues Five-Word Warning to Caitlin Clark Amid WNBA Struggles. Caitlin Clark's WNBA career has had a rocky start. Taurasi previously predicted that Clark would face challenges early in her career due to the physicality of the WNBA, and so far, she has been proven correct. On Friday, Taurasi addressed her earlier comments, reiterating that it's normal for college stars to need time to adjust to the professional level. Taurasi also clarified that her comments were not intended to criticize Clark but to highlight the inevitable learning curve for any player transitioning from college to the pros. Look, I only said it because, when I watch games – you talk to any professional athlete – you just look at what will they look like as a pro? For many, Clark's struggles are surprising, but WNBA legend Diana Taurasi anticipated this outcome. The NCAA's all-time leading scorer has experienced historic losses in her first two regular-season games with the Indiana Fever. The team has set a record for the largest combined deficit in a franchise's first two games, losing by a total of 57 points. "It's going to take time," she warned Clark. Right?
