

India critics of empire seized upon the small spaces that colonial policy allowed, such as councils, which since 1861 had functioned with a mix of elected and appointed members.