

Considering the patient's psychological well-being is crucial for the successful outcome of the procedure. The consent form and intravenous contrast also can add more fear to the interventional procedure. Anxiety disorders in medically ill patients can cause false-positive results from radiological imaging, blurring objective medical examination and diagnosis.