

Active engagement in pharmacology-related activities beyond the required curriculum entails seeking out opportunities for practical application, research exploration, and professional development in the field. To address why only Aspirin, among all nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs (NSAIDs), can be used as an antiplatelet agent, I would undertake the following steps: