

Traditional supply chains are disrupted by various global issues, highlighting the need for decentralization and technology to produce more food sustainably.