

Last summer holiday, I went on a tour around Algeria. Then, I took the train to Tamanrasset, in southern Algeria, to visit the magnificent Hoggar Mountains or Ahaggar Mountains. I saw the splendid suspended Bridge of Sidi M'Cid which was built by the French engineer Ferdinand Arnodin. In this town, I saw the prehistoric wall carvings of different creatures that made the Sahara their home long ago, I enjoyed the best sunset in the world and I tasted the Saharan tea. In Oran, I visited a historic site named Santa Cruz Fort that was constructed by the Spaniards in the 17th century. First, I travelled by coach to an old city in the northeast part of Algeria called Constantine. After that, I flew to Oran with a stopover in Bechar for one night. Finally, I returned to Mascara by taxi after spending fantastic and gratifying days. I ate couscous at Royal Restaurant and it was very delicious.
