

This study explores how art instruction can be used to help students engage with important problems that matter to them and thereby adding personal value within a holistic education experience. The researcher found that all three students showed growth that extended beyond art-making itself to help them develop as independent problem solvers.