

Abstract Objectives: The goal of this human factors engineering–led improvement initiative was to examine whether the independent double check (IDC) during administration of high alert medications afforded improved patient safety when compared with a single check process.