

Soil, climate, and vegetation are interconnected elements that shape ecosystems. The type of soil in an area affects what plants can grow, and these plants, The climate, determined by factors such as temperature and precipitation, influences the type of vegetation that can thrive.