Terrestrial organisms live under pressure from the atmosphere.Each aquatic organism adapts to withstand the pressure it faces under its water depth Water is a liquid and a fluid.On the other hand, aquatic organisms live under greater pressures from both the atmosphere and the weight of water above them.Gases have the ability to compress easily, while liquids resist compression and therefore keep their volume almost constant.Fluids are substances characterized by their ability to flow.

Summarized by © lakhasly.com