Caesarean section is recommended in situations in which vaginal birth presents a greater likelihood of adverse maternal or perinatal outcomes than normal.Since labour attendants have no standardized clinical method to assist in this decision, statistical tools developed based on multiple labour variables may be an alternative.