

Cinderella is scrubbing down the floor and daydreaming about how happy she was when her mother was alive. The next day, the Prince, unable to stop thinking about Cinderella, orders a kingdom-wide search to find her. He travels from house to house with the glass slipper and has each girl try it on. If the slipper fits it must be the mysterious girl he danced with the night before. Since the slipper did not fit either of the stepsisters' feet, Cinderella's stepmother insists to try it on. She manages to force her foot to fit the slipper. She magically transforms into a fairy Godmother and turns Cinderella's rag gown into a beautiful dress fit for a princess. When the Prince arrives at Cinderella's house he is greeted by the obnoxious stepsisters. Her daydreams quickly fade when Cinderella's mean stepsisters demand her to make them breakfast. Cinderella's stepmother and sisters go to town to buy gowns and accessories for the ball. Before Cinderella leaves, fairy Godmother gives Cinderella glass slippers. At the Prince's Royal Ball, Cinderella's step-family arrives late. During that time, Cinderella's stepmother locked her in a room so she couldn't try on the slipper. She asks Cinderella for some food, and when Cinderella is about to give her some, Cinderella's evil stepmother forbids her to do it. Cinderella decides to give the old woman her own food and Cinderella is left without eating a thing. After breakfast Cinderella returns to her chores. Cinderella is forced to read the letter aloud, because the stepsisters cannot read. Cinderella is consoled by her mice friends. The mice cheer up Cinderella by making her a lovely gown out of rags. True to his word, the Prince proposes to Cinderella's step mother.
