

In David Foulds' book and his name (The Golden Goose and Other Stories) there are many stories and I loved two of them, the first of which is (The Frog Prince) that happened in the Princess Palace, the princess was one day playing with the golden ball and her ball fell in the spring, so the frog returned her to the princess after she promised him By taking him to the palace with her as a companion. Instead, the princess ran away after taking her ball, but the next day the frog arrived at the palace and the princess's father knew about it, so he told his daughter that she must fulfill her promise, so the princess did so. After three nights the frog spent with the princess, the frog turned into a handsome prince. Because a fairy has turned him into a frog, and his only hope of returning to a prince is spending three nights with a princess. Then the princess learned that the frog was not just an ordinary frog, and in the end, the prince married the princess.
