

Curling stresses are the forces and deformations that occur in the structures of solid pavements due to temperature variations. This phenomenon is particularly evident in areas experiencing temperature differences between pavement layers, causing stresses and deformations in the solid pavement. Curling stresses refer to the pressures and distortions that manifest in the structures of solid pavements due to changes in temperature.