

People can learn by seeing and imitating activities, as shown by Dr. Albert Bandura's observational learning experiment. The first group played with the doll in a non-aggressive and considerate manner, while the second group hit the doll in an aggressive manner. After observation.