

1. Definition Spermatogenesis allows the production of cells specialized in reproduction, haploid: male gametes or spermatozoa from diploid stem cells called spermatogon. This process, continuous during the life of the man, takes place in the male genital tract, in the seminiferous tubes of the testicle.