

China Porcelain originated in China during the T'ang dynasty, made from kaolin and china stone. Lighting includes natural light from shoji screens and artificial sources like lanterns, creating a serene atmosphere that focuses on harmony and flexibility in space arrangement. Chinese furniture is characterized by formality and symmetry, featuring beds similar to k'angs, with movable canopy designs, low railings, and embellishments like carving and draperies. Japan Japanese interiors utilize natural materials like oak, chestnut, and plaster, emphasizing simplicity and careful selection of decorative accessories. Tables discovered range from dining to side tables, with various leg designs and decorative features, while chests and cabinets serve as storage, displaying intricate woodwork and metal hardware. Ceilings in public spaces often highlight repeating geometric designs, adding to the visual complexity.