

"Hating Angel Reese is a red flag for real," the Chicago Sky forward reposted. There are plenty of others echoing the message, including former NFL quarterback turned commentator Robert Griffin III. That ties a WNBA record held by Candace Parker," Griffin wrote on X, formerly known as Twitter. Reese spoke more directly to her critics on July 2, saying her All-Star spot is a strong answer to those who doubted whether she could make the jump from college to the WNBA. "I'm just so happy. I know the work I put in," Reese said, via ESPN. WNBA Star Angel Reese Sends Clear Message to Her Haters. The star rookie re-shared a message calling out her "haters." "Hating on Angel Reese? That's a big red flag. The star WNBA rookie has become a flashpoint for criticism since entering the league, but pushed back this week with a blunt message. Reese took to social media to reshare a post from a user calling out those hating on her. After Reese was named to the WNBA All-Star squad, Griffin said even the "haters" should recognize her accomplishment. Angel Reese has had 9 straight double-doubles." "I mean even her haters gotta put down that haterade and recognize how impressive this is."