

The Contrastive Analysis Hypothesis Language learners' errors are primarily caused by interference from their native language (L1) when acquiring a second language (L2). Adult language learning research provides mixed support for CAH Adults exhibit L1 influence in pronunciation, grammar, and vocabulary usage. Children's errors are not solely due to L1 interference; cognitive development, universal grammar, and input quality also play significant roles.