

– Microfluidic systems within collagen matrices replicate in vivo-like for disease modeling. – Primary human cell cultures and animal cell lines have limitations in representing specialized human tissue characteristics. – Examples: Microfluidic channels for studying Parkinson's disease. – Integration of bioengineered environments with patient-specific stem cells (iPS cells).