

At the beginning the poet was very happy with the life in the forest, he emphasizes the peace, freedom and happiness people feel in the forest. In the last stanza, the poet contradicts himself by saying that it's pity to leave that comfortable and wealthy life to go and live in a forest. He assures them that the only enemy is cold weather. He encourages people to enjoy their lives in the town because there is nothing in the forest