

Plastic waste is a global environmental crisis, with millions of tons entering oceans and landfills annually. Solutions include reducing plastic production, improving recycling technologies, promoting biodegradable alternatives, and enhancing public awareness and policy measures. The material is durable and resistant to decomposition, leading to severe ecological impacts, including harm to wildlife and pollution of natural habitats.