

The implications of Organizational Culture for Staffing Decisions Cultures vary across organizations • Individuals will consider this information if it is available to them in their job-search process Individuals who choose jobs with organizations that are consistent with their own values, beliefs, and attitudes are more likely to be productive, satisfied employees