

The descriptor 'through the air' can be used in an overarching way to characterize an infectious disease where transmission involves the pathogen travelling through or being suspended in the air.