

Cuba is bordered on the south by the Caribbean Sea and on the north by the Gulf of Mexico and the Straits of Florida. During the May through October rainy season, Cuba receives up to 75% of its yearly rainfall, which averages 54 inches (137 cm). Prevailing trade winds combine with warm waters of the Gulf Stream to produce a mild and semitropical climate. Occasional near-freezing temperatures occur only in mountain areas.