

Saratoga, A California, USA I've always been interested in how things work. I'm developing a type of battery that charges super quickly but is small and light enough to be used in handheld devices like smart phones and tablets. I suppose that natural curiosity was the start of my interest in electronics and put me on the path to becoming an inventor. Telling me how something worked simply wasn't enough – I had to see it for myself.