

A 19th-century American, literary and philosophical movement called Transcendentalism, centred around Ralph Waldo Emerson. The combination of Emerson's 'Nature' and 'Self-Reliance' stressed the significance of trusting inner voice while Thoreau's Walden preached the importance of nature in self exploration. For the Transcendentalists, the world of spirits is the only source for reality.