

In paragraph E, it is necessary to strike a balance between production and consumption for a country's economy to thrive because: 1. In summary, striking a balance between production and consumption is necessary for a country's economy to thrive as it ensures a stable and sustainable economic environment, promotes economic growth, and optimizes resource utilization. Excessive production or consumption can create economic distortions and volatility, which can have adverse effects on businesses, consumers, and the overall economy. On the other hand, if consumption exceeds production, it can lead to shortages and increased prices, negatively impacting the overall economy. When production and consumption are balanced, it reduces the likelihood of economic imbalances such as inflation or deflation. When production and consumption are aligned, resources are allocated optimally, minimizing waste and maximizing productivity. 2.3.4.