

Diabetes may present with characteristic symptoms and signs (Table 2). However, the type of diabetes cannot always be determined at diagnosis, and initial treatment decisions should be based on clinical presentation and plasma glucose values. As a result, in the absence of biochemical testing, hyperglycaemia sufficient to cause pathological and functional changes may be present for a long time before a diagnosis is made, resulting in the presence of complications at diagnosis. (2,3)