

Once a pigeon made its nest on a tree beside a kitchen. One day, a crow saw the pigeon while the cook was feeding him grains. "Along with these grains the pigeon must also be getting tasty food to eat," he thought. With this purpose, the crow approached the pigeon. In his haste, the crow touched the ladle. Every day, he would feed the pigeon grains. With time, the crow convinced the pigeon that they should stay together. When the cook wasn't around, the crow flew into the kitchen. Over time, the cook began to like the pigeon. "I must make him my friend," thought the crow. The crow was disappointed to hear this but he agreed to the condition.