

If development consists of systematic changes and continuities from conception to death, the science of development consists of the study of those changes and continuities and their causes.