

he first tourist trip to space was recorded in 2001 AD by the first space tourist in the world, American businessman Dennis Tito, who was able to make his trip, for which he paid twenty million dollars, aboard the Russian spacecraft Soyuz TM-32.[3] Space tourism is classified as a rapidly growing industry, attracting wealthy travelers and sports fans, as it is similar to...[2] The concept of space tourism was able to develop, after the establishment of Virgin Galactic Company, after Richard Branson's attempts with a successful test flight in 2018 AD on board a rocket spaceship, took off to an altitude of 82 kilometers above the Mojave Desert in California.