

Drenik and Perez's 2020 study reveals that countries with high price dollarization experience more exchange rate disruptions on consumer prices, impacting domestic inflation and economic stability.