

If feeding regularly, a female bed bug can lay between two and three eggs per day throughout her adult lifetime, which may last several months, allowing one female to produce hundreds of offspring under optimal conditions. Meals take several minutes to consume, and occur only under the correct conditions: darkness, warmth, and carbon dioxide. The tiny (