

Media and advertisements play a significant role in shaping dietary behavior by influencing what we see, desire, and ultimately consume. They often depict appealing images of food, promote certain dietary trends, and associate products with desirable lifestyles.