

Caitlin Clark Gets Her Revenge On Angel Reese Again. Rivalries in sports are what make them so great. Indiana Fever guard Caitlin Clark and Chicago Sky forward Angel Reese headline the star power from this year's rookie class, each giving their own twist on what the term means. The two were somewhat rivals in college dating back to the 2023 NCAA Tournament Championship game when Reese's LSU Tigers defeated Clark's Iowa Hawkeyes. We have seen over the years what a strong rivalry can do for the viewership of a sport and the WNBA is finally starting to reap some of the benefits from this. This extends to the players, coaches, organizations, and fans. And now with the addition of the 2024 WNBA Draft class, the interest in the sport has grown to even higher levels. They keep narratives alive and drive all sorts of drama up from out of nowhere. With the rise in popularity in recent years, the W has added much more talent to the league.
