

Oil is an organic substance formed as a result of exposure of living organisms to high pressure and high temperature for millions of years. Oil derivatives are used as fuel for planes, cars, ships and trains, and are used to power machinery and equipment.