

My time at university was instrumental in preparing me for a career in nursing. I learned how to effectively communicate with patients and their families, adapt to diverse healthcare settings, and collaborate with multidisciplinary teams. The importance of patient-centered care became evident to me through these experiences, and I honed my critical thinking and decision-making skills in real-life scenarios.